1. Value

Value is how light or dark something appears in an image. Designers use different values to create contrast, show shapes, and direct the viewer's attention. In my album cover, the bright sunset stands out against the dark trees and road.

2. Space

Space is the area around, between, and within objects in a design. It can make an image feel crowded or open and can create the illusion of depth. In my design, the road, mountains, and traveler create foreground, middle ground, and background.

3. Unity

Unity is how the different parts of a design work together to make the image feel complete. Repeated colors, textures, and styles can help create unity. My album cover uses warm sunset colors and dark natural tones to connect the different elements.

4. Balance

Balance is how visual weight is distributed throughout a composition. A design can be symmetrical, with similar elements on both sides, or asymmetrical, with different elements balancing one another. My design uses asymmetrical balance because the dark trees on the left balance the bright sunset and geometric shapes on the right.

5. Rhythm

Rhythm is the way repeated lines, shapes, colors, or patterns guide the viewer's eyes through a design. It can create a feeling of movement or repetition. In my album cover, the winding road, repeated mountain layers, and vertical geometric bars create rhythm and guide the viewer toward the sunset.
